

I'm not robot!

PEOPLE THINK THAT I MUST BE A VERY STRANGE PERSON. THIS IS NOT CORRECT. I HAVE THE HEART OF A SMALL BOY. IT IS IN A GLASS JAR ON MY DESK."

Stephen King

To write is human,
to edit is divine.

When a good writer is having fun, the audience is almost always having fun too.

Stephen King

Writing fiction, especially a long work of fiction, can be a difficult, lonely job; it's like crossing the Atlantic Ocean in a bathtub. There's plenty of opportunity for self-doubt.

A black and white portrait of Stephen King, showing him from the chest up. He has glasses and is looking slightly to his left with a thoughtful expression.

I am convinced that fear is at the root of the most bad writing. I have written twenty novels in ten years, and often I shoot in a chair on my writing desk feeling a bit, or much, of fear. I don't have so much fear that writing I'm about to do is bad - if one of the scripts in your first draft is bad, you simply go better during the revisions - but I'm afraid I will fail again. Over the years I have written so many books that eventually went directly into the drawer, to never be seen again. I put my heart in projects that for whatever reason never worked. The truth is you should have some fear during the writing of a novel. A bit of fear is normal. If you're not afraid at all, and you're completely confident at every stage of the process, your last manuscript may not be all you experience. It could be too safe. Or it could be too similar to other things you wrote before. You always want to risk in your writing, good and evil. You're afraid of the last novel you're taking, but don't be afraid when it comes to writing itself. Do your best and fix what doesn't work later.5. When I work every day - three, four hours and try to get those six pages and try to take them clean enough. So, if the manuscript is, say, 360 pages long, it is practically two months of work. People are always amazed how prolific Stephen King has been for fifty years now Down day by day, he's doing nothing extraordinary. He's not sitting at his desk from 8 to 5 by writing dozens and dozens of pages. He prolific does for his consistency. Its ability to write a specific amount of words and pages every day all year round. Not nine hours a day. Not five or six. ThirteenFour hours a day, sometimes less. I always tell people that they want to write their first novels: decide on a count of words, and stick to that word count every single day until they reach the end of the first draft. My word counts when I write a new novel is always 2,000 words a day. I often turn to 100,000 words for a new novel, and if I write five days a week, it's 10,000 words a week for ten weeks. Yes, in just ten weeks (and often less) I have the first completed draft of a novel. King often writes his first drafts in about two months... And you know what? You too! Mirate for at least 1,000 words per day and stay at that program until it is necessary.6 Sometimes you have to go ahead when you do not feel like it, and sometimes you are doing a good job when you feel like everything you are managing is to slip shit from a sitting position. This happens almost every time you get deep into a new novel project. Sometimes it's page fifty. It is often page 120 or 170 or something. For me it's always a chapter near the middle of the manuscript when I feel like I've lost my way... and the book does not come together as I hoped. I think of myself, this is shit, it's terrible, I should leave this novel and start something else. Why, oh why, am I such a terrible writer? We all feel so at some point during the writing process of the novel. It's okay. It's totally normal. The important thing is to continue even when you hear your writing is terrible, even when you do not feel like continuing. Because it's absolutely true: sometimes you're doing a good job even if you feel like it's shit. I've written a short story recently. I thought it was one of the worst things I've ever written. and then went to sell to a prestigious literary within weeks, a lot for my delight and surprise. You never know. Often you are too close to the material.
